Ben. Johnſon's Catiline.

BONE. n. ſ. [ban, Saxon.] 1. The ſolid parts of the body of an animal made up of hard fibres, tied one to another by ſmall tranſverſe fibres, as thoſe of the muſcles. In a fœtus they are porous, ſoft, and eaſily diſcerned. As their pores fill with a ſubſtance of their own nature, ſo they increaſe, harden, and grow cloſe to one another. They are all ſpongy, and full of little cells, or are of a conſiderable firm thickneſs, with a large cavity, except the teeth; and where they are articulated, they are covered with a thin and ſtrong membrane, called the perioſteum. Each bone is much bigger at its extremity than in the middle, that the articulations might be firm, and the bones not eaſily put out of joint. But, becauſe the middle of the bone ſhould be ſtrong, to ſuſtain its allotted weight, and reſiſt accidents, the fibres are there more cloſely compacted together, ſupporting one another; and the bone is made hollow, and conſequently not ſo eaſily broken, as it muſt have been had it been ſolid and ſmaller. Quincy. 2. A fragment of meat; a bone with as much fleſh as adheres to it. 3. To be upon the bones. To attack. 4. To make no bones. To make no ſcruple: a metaphor taken from a dog, who readily ſwallows meat that has no bones. 5. Bones. A ſort of bobbins, made of trotter bones, for weaving bonelace. 6. Bones. Dice.

(3.) At laſt from Aries rolls the bounteous ſun,
And the bright Bull receives him. Thomſon.

(4.) A bull is letters called apoſtolick by the canoniſts, ſtrengthened with a leaden ſeal, and containing in them the decrees and commandments of the pope or biſhop of Rome. Ayliffe

There was another ſort of ornament wore by the young nobility, called bullæ; round, or of the figure of a heart, hung about their necks like diamond croſſes. Thoſe bullæ came afterwards to be hung to the diplomas of the emperors and popes, from whence they had the name of bulls. Arbuthnot.

It was not till after a freſh bull of Leo's had declared how inflexible the court of Rome was in the point of abuſes. Atterb.

(5.) I confeſs it is what the Engliſh call a bull, in the expreſſion, though the ſenſe be manifeſt enough. Pope's Letters.

BULL, in compoſition, generally notes the large ſize of any thing, as, bull-head; bulruſh, bull-trout; and is therefore only an augmentative ſyllable, without much reference to its original ſignification.

BULL-BAITING. n. ſ. [from bull and bait.] The ſport of baiting bulls with dogs.

What am I the wiſer for knowing that Trajan was in the fifth year of his tribuneſhip, when he entertained the people with a horſe-race or bull-baiting? Addiſon.

BULL-BEEF. n. ſ. [from bull and beef.] Coarſe beef; the fleſh of bulls.

They want their porridge and their fat bull-beeves. Shakeſp.

BULL-BEGGAR. n. ſ. [This word probably came from the inſolence of thoſe who begged, or raiſed money by the pope's bull.] Something terrible; ſomething to fright children with.

Theſe fulminations from the Vatican were turned into ridicule; and, as they were called bull-beggars, they were uſed as words of ſcorn and contempt. Ayliffe.

BULL-CALF. n. ſ. [from bull and calf.] A he calf; uſed for a ſtupid fellow; a term of reproach.

And, Falſtaff, you carried your guts away as nimbly, and roared for mercy, and ſtill ran and roared, as ever I heard a bull-calf. Shakeſp.

BULL-DOG. n. ſ. [from bull and dog.] A dog of a particular form, remarkable for his courage. He is uſed in baiting the bull; and this ſpecies is ſo peculiar to Britain, that they are ſaid to degenerate when they are carried to other countries.

All the harmleſs part of him is that of a bull-dog; they are tame no longer than they are not offended. Addiſon.

BULL-FINCH. n. ſ. [rubicilla.] A ſmall bird, that has neither ſong nor whiſtle of its own, yet is very apt to learn, if taught by the mouth. Philips's World of Words.

BU'LLET. n. ſ. [boulet, Fr.] A round ball of metal, uſually ſhot out of guns.

As when the deviliſh iron engine wrought
In deepeſt hell, and fram'd by furies ſkill,
With windy nitre and quick ſulphur fraught,
And rammed with bullet round, ordain'd to kill. Spenſer.

Giafer, their leader, deſperately fighting amongſt the foremoſt of the janizaries, was at once ſhot with two bullets, and ſlain. Knolles.

And as the built, ſo different is the fight;
Their mounting ſhot is on our ſails deſign'd:
Deep in their hulls our deadly bullets light,
And through the yielding planks a paſſage find. Dryden.

Bu'llion. n. ſ. [billon, Fr.] Gold or ſilver in the lump, unwrought, uncoined.

The balance of trade muſt of neceſſity be returned in coin or bullion. Bacon.

——— A ſecond multitude,
With wond'rous art, found out the maſſy ore,
Severing each kind, and ſcumm'd the bullion droſs. Milton.

Bullion is ſilver whoſe workmanſhip has no value. And thus foreign coin hath no value here for its ſtamp, and our coin is bullion in foreign dominions. Locke.

In every veſſel there is ſtowage for immenſe treaſures, when the cargo is pure bullion. Addiſon.

Bulli'tion. n. ſ. [from bullio, Lat.] The act or ſtate of boiling.

Th' appointed way, and runs with threat'ning horns. Cowley.

Until the tranſportation of cattle into England was prohibited, the quickeſt trade of ready money here was driven by the ſale of young bullocks. Temple.

Bu'lly. n. ſ. [Skinner derives this word from burly, as a corruption in the pronunciation; which is very probably right; or from bulky, or bull-eyed; which are leſs probable. May it not come from bull, the pope's letter, implying the inſolence of thoſe who came inveſted with authority from the papal court?] A noiſy, bluſtering, quarrelling fellow; it is generally taken for a man that has only the appearance of courage.

Mine hoſt of the garter!—What ſays my bully rock? Speak ſcholarly and wiſely. Shakeſp.

All on a ſudden the doors flew open, and in comes a crew of roaring bullies, with their wenches, their dogs, and their bottles. L'Eſtrange.

'Tis ſo ridic'lous, but ſo true withal,
A bully cannot ſleep without a brawl. Dryden.

A ſcolding hero is, at the worſt, a more tolerable character than a bully in petticoats. Addiſon.

The little man is a bully in his nature, but, when he grows cholerick, I confine him till his wrath is over. Addiſon.

To Bu'lly. v. a. [from the noun.] To overbear with noiſe or menaces.

Prentices, pariſh clerks, and hectors meet,
He that is drunk, or bully'd, pays the treat. King.

To Bu'lly. v. n. To be noiſy and quarrelſome.

Bu'lrush. n. ſ. [from bull and ruſh.] A large ruſh, ſuch as grows in rivers, without knots; though Dryden has given it the epithet knotty, confounding it, probably, with the reed.

To make fine cages for the nightingale,
And baſkets of bulruſhes, was my wont. Spenſer.

All my praiſes are but as a bulruſh caſt upon a ſtream; they are born by the ſtrength of the current. Dryden.

The edges were with bending oſiers crown'd;
The knotty bulruſh next in order ſtood,
And all within of reeds a trembling wood. Dryden.

BU'LWARK. n. ſ. [bolwercke, Dutch; probably only from its ſtrength and largeneſs.] 1. What is now called a baſtion. 2. A fortification. 3. A ſecurity; a ſcreen; a ſhelter.

(1.) But him the ſquire made quickly to retreat,
Encountering fierce with ſingle ſword in hand,
And 'twixt him and his lord did like a bulwark ſtand. Spenſ.

——— They oft repair
Their earthen bulwarks 'gainſt the ocean flood. Fairfax.

——— We have bulwarks round us;
Within our walls are troops enur'd to toil. Addiſon.

And, in our maiden council, rated them
As courtſhip, pleaſant jeſt, and courteſy,
As bumbaſt, and as lining to the time. Shakeſp.

Bump. n. ſ. [perhaps from bum, as being prominent.] A ſwelling; a protuberance.

It had upon its brow a bump as big as a young cockrel's ſtone; a perilous knock, and it cried bitterly. Shakeſp.

Not though his teeth are beaten out, his eyes
Hang by a ſtring, in bumps his forehead riſe. Dryden.

To Bump. v a. [from bombus, Lat.] To make a loud noiſe, or bomb. [See Bomb.] It is applied, I think, only to the bittern.

Then to the water's brink ſhe laid her head,
And as a bittour bumps within a reed,
To thee alone, O lake, ſhe ſaid—— Dryden.

Bu'mper. n. ſ. [from bump.] A cup filled till the liquor ſwells over the brims.

——— Places his delight
All day in playing bumpers, and at night
Reels to the bawds. Dryden's Juvenal.

Bu'mpkin. n. ſ. [This word is of uncertain etymology; Henſhaw derives it from pumkin, a kind of worthleſs gourd, or melon. This ſeems harſh; yet we uſe the word cabbage-head in the ſame ſenſe. Bump is uſed amongſt us for a knob, or lump; may not bumpkin be much the ſame with clodpate loggerhead, block, and blockhead.] An awkward heavy ruſtick; a country lout.

The poor bumpkin, that had never heard of ſuch delights before, bleſſed herſelf at the change of her condition. L'Eſt.

Ca'ble. n. ſ. [cabl, Welch; cabel, Dutch.] The great rope of a ſhip to which the anchor is faſtened.

What though the maſt be now blown overboard,
The cable broke, the holding anchor loſt,
And half our ſailors ſwallow'd in the flood,
Yet lives our pilot ſtill? Shakeſp.

The length of the cable is the life of the ſhip in all extremities; and the reaſon is, becauſe it makes ſo many bendings and waves, as the ſhip, riding at that length, is not able to ſtretch it; and nothing breaks that is not ſtretched. Raleigh.

The cables crack, the ſailors fearful cries
Aſcend; and ſable night involves the ſkies. Dryden.

Ca'burns. n. ſ. Small ropes uſed in ſhips. Dict.

Ca'cao. See Chocolatenut.

Cache'ctical. } adj. [from cachexy.] Having an ill ha-
Cache'ctick. } bit of body; ſhowing an ill habit.

Young and florid blood, rather than vapid and cachectical. Arbuthn. on Air.

(1.) Now was the ſun in weſtern cadence low
From noon; and gentle airs, due at their hours,
To fan the earth, now wak'd. Milton.

(2.) The ſliding, in the cloſe of cadence, hath an agreement with the figure in rhetorick, which they call prater expectatum; for there is a pleaſure even in being deceived. Bacon.

There be words not made with lungs,
Sententious ſhow'rs! O! let them fall,
Their cadence is rhetorical. Craſhaw.

(3.) The words, the verſification, and all the other elegancies of ſound, as cadences, and turns of words upon the thought, performed exactly the ſame office both in dramatick and epick poetry. Dryden.

The cadency of one line muſt be a rule to that of the next; as the ſound of the former muſt ſlide gently into that which follows. Dryden.

(4.) ——— Hollow rocks retain
The ſound of bluſt'ring winds, which all night long
Had rous'd the ſea, now with hoarſe cadence lull
Sea-faring men, o'erwatch'd. Milton.

He hath a confuſed remembrance of words ſince he left the univerſity; he hath loſt half their meaning, and puts them together with no regard, except to their cadence. Swift.

(1.) See whether a cage can pleaſe a bird? or whether a dog grow not fiercer with tying? Sidney.

He taught me how to know a man in love; in which cage of ruſhes, I am ſure, you are not a priſoner. Shakeſp.

Though ſlaves, like birds that ſing not in a cage,
They loſt their genius, and poetick rage;
Homers again and Pindars may be found,
And his great actions with their numbers crown'd. Waller.

And parrots, imitating human tongue,
And ſinging birds in ſilver cages hung:
And ev'ry fragrant flow'r, and od'rous green,
Were ſorted well, with lumps of amber laid between. Dryd.

A man recurs to our fancy, by remembering his garment; a beaſt, bird, or fiſh, by the cage, or court-yard, or ciſtern, wherein it was kept. Watts on the Mind.

The reaſon why ſo few marriages are happy, is, becauſe young ladies ſpend their time in making nets, not in making cages. Swift.

To CAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To incloſe in a cage.

He ſwoln, and pamper'd with high fare,
Sits down, and ſnorts, cag'd in his baſket-chair. Donne.

CAI'TIFF. n. ſ. [cattivo, Ital. a ſlave; whence it came to ſignify a bad man, with ſome implication of meanneſs; as knave in Engliſh, and fur in Latin; ſo certainly does ſlavery deſtroy virtue.

'Ημισυ τῆς ἀρετῆς ἀποαίνυται δούλιον ἦμαρ. Homer.

A ſlave and a ſcoundrel are ſignified by the ſame words in many languages.] A mean villain; a deſpicable knave: it often implies a mixture of wickedneſs and miſery.

Vile caitiff, vaſſal of dread and deſpair,
Unworthy of the common breathed air;
Why liveſt thou, dead dog, a longer day,
And doſt not unto death thyſelf prepare? Spenſer.

——— 'Tis not impoſſible
But one, the wicked'ſt caitiff on the ground,
May ſeem as ſhy, as grave, as juſt, as abſolute,
As Angelo. Shakeſp.

The wretched caitiff, all alone,
As he believ'd, began to moan,
And tell his ſtory to himſelf. Hudibras.

Calcedonius is of the agate kind, and of a miſty grey, clouded with blue, or with purple. Woodw. on Foſſils.

To CA'LCINATE. See To CALCINE.

In hardening, by baking without melting, the heat hath theſe degrees; firſt, it endurateth, then maketh fragile, and, laſtly, it doth calcinate. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt.

CALCINA'TION. n. ſ. [from calcine, calcination, Fr.] Such a management of bodies by fire, as renders them reducible to powder; wherefore it is called chymical pulverization. This is the next degree of the power of fire beyond that of fuſion; for when fuſion is longer continued, not only the more ſubtile particles of the body itſelf fly off, but the particles of fire likewiſe inſinuate themſelves in ſuch multitudes, and are ſo blended through its whole ſubſtance, that the fluidity, firſt cauſed by the fire, can no longer ſubſiſt. From this union ariſes a third kind of body, which, being very porous and brittle, is eaſily reduced to powder; for, the fire having penetrated every where into the pores of the body, the particles are both hindered from mutual contact, and divided into minute atoms. Quincy.

Divers reſidences of bodies are thrown away, as ſoon as the diſtillation or calcination of the body that yielded them is ended. Boyle.

This may be effected, but not without a calcination, or reducing it by art into a ſubtile powder. Brown's Vulg. Err.

CALCI'NATORY. n. ſ. [from calcinate.] A veſſel uſed in calcination.

To CALCI'NE. v. a. [calciner, Fr. from calx, Lat.] 1. To burn in the fire to a calx, or friable ſubſtance. See CALCINATION. 2. To burn up.

(1.) The ſolids ſeem to be earth, bound together with ſome oil; for if a bone be calcined, ſo as the leaſt force will crumble it, being emerſed in oil, it will grow firm again. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

(2.) Firy diſputes that union have calcin'd,
Almoſt as many minds as men we find. Denham.

To CALCINE. v. n. To become a calx by heat.

This cryſtal is a pellucid fiſſile ſtone, clear as water, and without colour, enduring a red heat without loſing its tranſparency, and, in very ſtrong heat, calcining without fuſion. Newton's Opticks.

To CA'LCULATE. v. a. [calculer, Fr. from calculus, Lat. a little ſtone or bead, uſed in operations of numbers.] 1. To compute; to reckon: as, he calculates his expences. 2. To compute the ſituation of the planets at any certain time. 3. To adjuſt; to project for any certain end.

(2.) A cunning man did calculate my birth,
And told me, that by water I ſhould die. Shakeſp. Hen. VI.

Why all theſe fires, why all theſe gliding ghoſts,
Why old men, fools, and children calculate,
Why all thoſe things change from their ordinance? Shakeſp.

Who were there then in the world, to obſerve the births of thoſe firſt men, and calculate their nativities, as they ſprawled out of ditches? Bentley.

(3.) The reaſonableneſs of religion clearly appears, as it tends ſo directly to the happineſs of men, and is, upon all accounts, calculated for our benefit. Tillotſon.

To CA'LCULATE. v. n. To make a computation.

CALCULA'TION. n. ſ. [from calculate.] 1. A practice, or manner of reckoning; the art of numbering. 2. A reckoning; the reſult of arithmetical operation.

(1.) Cypher, that great friend to calculation; or rather, which changeth calculation, into eaſy computation. Holder on Time.

CE'CITY. n. ſ. [cæcitas, Lat.] Blindneſs; privation of ſight.

They are not blind, nor yet diſtinctly ſee; there is in them no cecity, yet more than a cecutiency; they have ſight enough to diſcern the light, though not perhaps to diſtinguiſh objects or colours. Brown's Vulg. Err.

CECU'TIENCY. n. ſ. [cæcutio, Lat.] Tendency to blindneſs; cloudineſs of ſight.

There is in them no cecity, yet more than a cecutiency. Brown's Vulg. Err.

CE'DAR. n. ſ. [cedrus, Lat.] A tree.

It is evergreen; the leaves are much narrower than thoſe of the pine tree, and many of them produced out of one tubercle, reſembling a painter's pencil; it hath male flowers, or katkins, produced at remote diſtances from the fruit on the ſame tree. The ſeeds are produced in large cones, ſquamoſe and turbinated. The extention of the branches is very regular in cedar trees; the ends of the ſhoots declining, and thereby ſhewing their upper ſurface, which is conſtantly cloathed with green leaves, ſo regularly as to appear at a diſtance like a green carpet, and, in waving about, making an agreeable proſpect. It is ſurpriſing that this tree has not been more cultivated in England; for it would be a great ornament to barren bleak mountains, even in Scotland, where few other trees would grow; it being a native of Mount Libanus, where the ſnow continues moſt part of the year. Maundrel, in his Travels, ſays, he meaſured one of the largeſt cedars on Mount Libanus, and found it to be twelve yards ſix inches in circumference, and ſound. At about five or ſix yards from the ground, it was divided into five limbs, each of which was equal to a great tree. The wood of this famous tree is accounted proof againſt the putrefaction of animal bodies. The ſaw duſt is thought to be one of the ſecrets uſed by the mountebanks, who pretend to have the embalming myſtery. This wood is alſo ſaid to yield an oil, which is famous for preſerving books and writings, and the wood is thought by Bacon to continue above a thouſand years ſound. Miller.

I muſt yield my body to the earth:
Thus yields the cedar to the axe's edge,
Whoſe arms gave ſhelter to the princely eagle;
Under whoſe ſhade the ramping lion ſlept,
Whoſe top branch overpeer'd Jove's ſpreading tree,
And kept low ſhrubs from winter's pow'rful wind. Shakeſp.

CE'DRINE. adj. [cedrinus, Lat.] Of or belonging to the cedar tree.

To CEIL. v. a. [cælo, Lat.] To overlay, or cover the inner roof of a building.

And the greater houſe he ceiled with fir-tree, which he overlaid with fine gold. 2 Chron.

How will he, from his houſe ceiled with cedar, be content with his Saviour's lot, not to have where to lay his head? Decay of Piety.

CE'ILING. n. ſ. [from ceil.] The inner roof.

Varniſh makes ceilings not only ſhine, but laſt. Bacon.

—— And now the thicken'd ſky
Like a dark ceiling ſtood; down ruſh'd the rain
Impetuous. Milton's Par. Loſt.

So when the ſun by day, or moon by night,
Strike on the poliſh'd braſs their trembling light,
The glitt'ring ſpecies here and there divide,
And caſt their dubious beams from ſide to ſide:
Now on the walls, now on the pavement play,
And to the ceiling flaſh the glaring day. Dryden.

CE'LANDINE. [chelidoneum, Lat.] A plant.

The ſwallows uſe celandine, the linnet euphragia. More.

CHA'MBREL of a Horſe. The joint or bending up of the upper part of the hinder leg. Farrier's Dict.

CHAME'LEON. n. ſ. [χαμαιλέων.] The chameleon has four feet, and on each foot three claws. Its tail is long; with this, as well as with its feet, it faſtens itſelf to the branches of trees. Its tail is flat, its noſe long, in an obtuſe point; its back is ſharp, its ſkin plaited, and jagged like a ſaw from the neck to the laſt joint of the tail, and upon its head it has ſomething like a comb; like a fiſh, it has no neck. Some have aſſerted, that it lives only upon air; but it has been obſerved to feed on flies, catched with its tongue, which is about ten inches long, and three thick; made of white fleſh, round, but flat at the end; or hollow and open, reſembling an elephant's trunk. It alſo ſhrinks, and grows longer. This animal is ſaid to aſſume the colour of thoſe things to which it is applied; but our modern obſervers aſſure us, that its natural colour, when at reſt and in the ſhade, is a bluiſh grey; though ſome are yellow, and others green, but both of a ſmaller kind. When it is expoſed to the ſun, the grey changes into a darker grey, inclining to a dun colour, and its parts, which have leaſt of the light upon them, are changed into ſpots of different colours. The grain of its ſkin, when the light doth not ſhine upon it, is like cloth mixed with many colours. Sometimes when it is handled, it ſeems ſpeckled with dark ſpots, inclining to green. If it be put upon a black hat, it appears to be of a violet colour; and ſometimes if it be wrapped up in linen, it is white; but it changes colour only in ſome parts of the body. Calmet. A chameleon is a creature about the bigneſs of an ordinary lizard; his head unproportionably big, and his eyes great; he moveth his head without writhing of his neck, which is inflexible, as a hog doth; his back crooked, his ſkin ſpotted with little tumours, leſs eminent nearer the belly; his tail ſlender and long; on each foot he hath five fingers, three on the outſide, and two on the inſide; his tongue of a marvellous length in reſpect of his body, and hollow at the end, which he will launch out to prey upon flies; of colour green, and of a duſky yellow, brighter and whiter towards the belly; yet ſpotted with blue, white, and red. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt.

I can add colours ev'n to the chameleon;
Change ſhapes with Proteus, for advantage. Shakeſp.

One part devours the other, and leaves not ſo much as a mouthful of that popular air, which the chameleons gaſp after. Decay of Piety.

The thin chameleon, fed with air, receives
The colour of the thing to which he cleaves. Dryden.

As the chameleon, which is known
To have no colours of his own,
But borrows from his neighbour's hue
His white, or black, his green, or blue. Prior.

To CHA'MFER. v. a. [chambrer, French.] To channel; to make furrows or gutters upon a column.

CHA'MFER. } n. ſ. [from To chamfer.] A ſmall furrow
CHA'MFRET. } or gutter on a column.

CHA'MOIS. n. ſ. [chamois, Fr.] An animal of the goat kind, whoſe ſkin is made into ſoft leather, called among us ſhammy.

Theſe are the beaſts which you ſhall eat; the ox, the ſheep, and wild ox, and the chamois. Deut.

CHA'MOMILE. n. ſ. [χαμαιμῆλον.] An odoriferous plant.

Cool violets, and orpine growing ſtill,
Embathed balm, and cheerful galingale,
Freſh coſtmary, and breathful chamomile,
Dull poppy, and drink-quick'ning ſetuale. Spenſer.

For though the chamomile the more it is trodden on the faſter it grows; yet youth, the more it is waſted, the ſooner it wears. Shakeſp.

Poſſet drink with camomile flowers. Floyer on the Humours.

To CHAMP. v. a. [champayer, Fr.] 1. To bite with a frequent action of the teeth. 2. To devour, with violent action of the teeth.

(1.) Coffee and opium are taken down, tobacco but in ſmoke, and betel is but champed in the mouth with a little lime. Bacon.

The fiend reply'd not, overcome with rage;
But, like a proud ſteed rein'd, went haughty on,
Champing his iron curb. Milton's Par. Loſt.

——— At his command,
The ſteeds capariſon'd with purple ſtand,
And champ betwixt their teeth the foaming gold. Dryden.

(2.) A tobacco pipe happened to break in my mouth, and the pieces left ſuch a delicious roughneſs on my tongue, that I champed up the remaining part. Spectator.

To CHAMP. v. n. To perform frequently the action of biting.

Muttering and champing, as though his cud had troubled him, he gave occaſion to Muſidoris to come near him. Sidney.

They began to repent of that they had done, and irefully to champ upon the bit they had taken into their mouths. Hooker.

His jaws did not anſwer equally to one another; but by his frequent motion and champing with them, it was evident they were neither luxated nor fractured. Wiſeman.

CHA'MPAIGN. n. ſ. [campagne, Fr.] A flat open country.

In the abuſes of the cuſtoms, meſeems, you have a fair champaign laid open to you, in which you may at large ſtretch out your diſcourſe. Spenſer's State of Ireland.

——— Of all theſe bounds,
With ſhadowy foreſts and with champaigns rich'd,
We make thee lady. Shakeſp.

If two bordering princes have their territory meeting on an open champaign, the more mighty will continually ſeek occaſion to extend his limits unto the further border thereof. Raleigh.

Sir John Norris maintained a retreat without diſarray, by the ſpace of ſome miles, part of the way champaign, unto the city of Gaunt, with leſs loſs of men than the enemy. Bacon.

From his ſide two rivers flow'd,
Th' one winding, th' other ſtraight, and left between
Fair champaign, with leſs rivers interven'd. Milton.

CHA'MPERTORS. n. ſ. [from champerty. In law.] Such as move ſuits, or cauſe them to be moved, either by their own or others procurement, and purſue, at their proper coſts, to have part of the land in conteſt, or part of the gains. Cowel.

CHA'MPERTY. n. ſ. [champart, Fr. In law.] A maintenance of any man in his ſuit while depending, upon condition to have part of the thing when it is recovered. Cowel.

CHAMPI'GNON. n. ſ. [champignon, Fr.] A kind of muſhroom.

He viler friends with doubtful muſhrooms treats,
Secure for you, himſelf champignons eats. Dryden.

It has the reſemblance of a large champignon before it is opened, branching out into a large round knob. Woodw.

CHA'MPION. n. ſ. [champion, Fr. campio, low Lat.] 1. A man who undertakes a cauſe in ſingle combat. 2. A hero; a ſtout warriour; one bold in conteſt. 3. In law. In our common law, champion is taken no leſs for him that trieth the combat in his own caſe, than for him that fighteth in the caſe of another. Cowel.

(1.) In many armies, the matter ſhould be tried by duel between two champions. Bacon.

For hot, cold, moiſt, and dry, four champions fierce,
Strive here for maſt'ry, and to battle bring
Their embryon atoms. Milton's Par. Loſt.

O light of Trojans, and ſupport of Troy,
Thy father's champion, and thy country's joy! Dryden.

At length the adverſe admirals appear,
The two bold champions of each country's right. Dryden.

(2.) A ſtouter champion never handled ſword. Shakeſp.

This makes you incapable of conviction, and they applaud themſelves as zealous champions for truth, when indeed they are contending for errour. Locke.

To CHA'MPION. v. a. [from the noun.] To challenge to the combat.

—— The ſeed of Banquo, kings!
Rather than ſo, come fate, into the liſt,
And champion me to th' utterance. Shakeſp.

CHANCE. n. ſ. [chance, Fr.] 1. Fortune; the cauſe of fortuitous events. 2. Fortune; the act of fortune; what fortune may bring: applied to perſons. 3. Accident; caſual occurrence; fortuitous event. 4. Event; ſucceſs; luck: applied to things. 5. Misfortune; unlucky accident. 6. Poſſibility of any occurrence.

(1.)—— As th' unthought accident is guilty
Of what we wildly do, ſo we profeſs
Ourſelves to be the ſlaves of chance, and flies
Of every wind that blows. Shakeſp.

The only man, of all that chance could bring
To meet my arms, was worth the conquering. Dryden.

Chance is but a mere name, and really nothing in itſelf; a conception of our minds, and only a compendious way of ſpeaking, whereby we would expreſs, that ſuch effects as are commonly attributed to chance, were verily produced by their true and proper cauſes, but without their deſign to produce them. Bentley.

(3.) To ſay a thing is a chance or caſualty, as it relates to ſecond cauſes, is not profaneneſs, but a great truth; as ſignifying no more, than that there are ſome events beſides the knowledge and power of ſecond agents. South.

The beauty I beheld, has ſtruck me dead;
Unknowingly ſhe ſtrikes, and kills by chance;
Poiſon is in her eyes, and death in ev'ry glance. Dryden.

All nature is but art, unknown to thee;
All chance direction, which thou canſt not ſee. Pope.

(4.) Now we'll together, and the chance of goodneſs
Be like our warranted quarrel! Shakeſp.

(5.) ——— You were us'd
To ſay, extremity was the trier of ſpirits,
That common chances common men could bear. Shakeſp.

(6.) A chance, but chance may lead, where I may meet
Some wand'ring ſpirit of heav'n, by fountain ſide,
Or in thick ſhade retir'd. Milton's Par. Loſt.

Then your ladyſhip might have a chance to eſcape this addreſs. Swift.

Chance. adj. [It is ſeldom uſed but in compoſition.] Happening by chance.

Now ſhould they part, malicious tongues would ſay,
They met like chance companions on the way. Dryden.

——— I would not take the gift,
Which, like a toy dropt from the hands of fortune,
Lay for the next chance comer. Dryden.

To Chance. v. n. [from the noun.] To happen; to fall out; to fortune.

Think what a chance thou chanceſt on; but think; ———
Thou haſt thy miſtreſs ſtill. Shakeſp.

How chance thou art not with the prince thy brother? Shakeſp.

Ay, Caſca, tell us what hath chanc'd to-day,
That Cæſar looks ſo ſad. Shakeſp.

He chanc'd upon divers of the Turks victuallers, whom he eaſily took. Knolles's Hiſt. of the Turks.

I choſe the ſafer ſea, and chanc'd to find
A river's mouth impervious to the wind. Pope's Odyſſey.

Cha'nceful. adj. [chance and full] Hazardous. Out of uſe.

Myſelf would offer you t' accompany
In this adventurous chanceful jeopardy. Spenſer.

Chance-medley. n. ſ. [from chance and medley.] In law. The caſual ſlaughter of a man, not altogether without the fault of the ſlayer, when ignorance or negligence is joined with the chance; as if a man lop trees by an highway ſide, by which many uſually travel, and caſt down a bough, not giving warning to take heed thereof, by which bough one paſſing by is ſlain; in this caſe he offends, becauſe he gave no warning, that the party might have taken heed to himſelf. Cowel.

If ſuch an one ſhould have the ill hap, at any time, to ſtrike a man dead with a ſmart ſaying, it ought, in all reaſon and conſcience, to be judged but a chance-medley. South.

Cha'nceable. adj. [from chance.] Accidental.

The trial thereof was cut off by the chanceable coming thither of the king of Iberia. Sidney.

CHA'NCEL. n. ſ. [from cancelli, Lat. lettices, with which the chancel was incloſed.] The eaſtern part of the church, in which the altar is placed.

Whether it be allowable or no, that the miniſter ſhould ſay ſervice in the chancel. Hooker.

The chancel of this church is vaulted with a ſingle ſtone of four feet in thickneſs, and an hundred and fourteen in circumference. Addiſon on Italy.

Cha'ncellor. n. ſ. [cancellarius, Lat. chancellier, Fr. from cancellare literas, vel ſcriptum linea per medium ducta damnare, and ſeemeth of itſelf likewiſe to be derived à cancellis, which ſignify all one with κιγκλιδες, a lettice; that is, a thing made of wood or iron bars, laid croſsways one over another, ſo that a man may ſee through them in and out. It may be thought that judgment ſeats were compaſſed in with bars, to defend the judges and other officers from the preſs of the multitude, and yet not to hinder any man's view.

Quæſitus regni tibi cancellarius Angli,
Primus ſolliciti mente petendus erit.
Hic eſt, qui regni leges cancellat iniquas,
Et mandata pii principis æqua facit.

Verſes of Nigel de Wetekre to the biſhop of Ely, chancellor to Richard I.]

1. The higheſt judge of the law. Cancellarius, at the firſt, ſignified the regiſters or actuaries in court; grapharios, ſcil. qui conſcribendis & excipiendis judicum actis dant operam. But this name is greaty advanced, and not only in other kingdoms but in this, is given to him that is the chief judge in cauſes of property; for the chancellor hath power to moderate and temper the written law, and ſubjecteth himſelf only to the law of nature and conſcience. Cowel. 2. Chancellor in the Eccleſiaſtical Court. A biſhop's lawyer; a man trained up in the civil and canon law, to direct the biſhops in matters of judgment, relating as well to criminal as to civil affairs in the church. Ayliffe's Parergon. 3. Chancellor of a Cathedral. A dignitary, whoſe office it is to ſuperintend the regular exerciſe of devotion. 4. Chancellor of the Exchequer. An officer who ſits in that court, and in the exchequer chamber. He has power, with others, to compound for forfeitures on penal ſtatutes, bonds and recognizances entered into by the king. He has great authority in managing the royal revenue, and in matters of firſt fruits. The court of equity is in the exchequer chamber, and is held before the lord treaſurer, chancellor, and barons, as that of common law before the barons only. Cowel. Chamb. 5. Chancellor of an Univerſity. The principal magiſtrate, who, at Oxford, holds his office during life, but, at Cambridge, he may be elected every three years. 6. Chancellor of the Order of the Garter, and other military orders, is an officer who ſeals the commiſſions and mandates of the chapter and aſſembly of the knights, keeps the regiſter of their deliberations, and delivers their acts under the ſeal of the order. Chamb.

(1.) Turn out, you rogue, how like a beaſt you lie:
Go, buckle to the law: Is this an hour
To ſtretch your limbs? you'll ne'er be chancellor. Dryd. jun.

Ariſtides was a perſon of the ſtricteſt juſtice, and beſt acquainted with the laws, as well as forms of their government; ſo that he was in a manner chancellor of Athens. Swift.

Cha'ncellorship. n. ſ. The office of chancellor.

The Sunday after More gave up his chancellorſhip of England, he came himſelf to his wife's pew, and uſed the uſual words of his gentleman-uſher, Madam, my lord is gone. Camden.

Cha'ncery. n. ſ. [from chancellor; probably chancellery; then ſhortened.] The court of equity and conſcience, moderating the rigour of other courts, that are tied to the letter of the law; whereof the lord chancellor of England is the chief judge, or the lord keeper of the great ſeal. Cowel.

The contumacy and contempt of the party muſt be ſignified in the court of chancery, by the biſhops letters under the ſeal epiſcopal. Ayliffe's Parergon.

CHA'NCRE. n. ſ. [chancre, Fr.] An ulcer uſually ariſing from venereal maladies.

It is poſſible he was not well cured, and would have relapſed with a chancre. Wiſeman.

Cha'ncrous. adj. [from chancre.] Having the qualities of a chancre; ulcerous.

You may think I am too ſtrict in giving ſo many internals in the cure of ſo ſmall an ulcer as a chancre, or rather a chancerous callus. Wiſeman.

Chandeli'er. n. ſ. [chandelier, Fr.] A branch for candles.

Cha'ndler. n. ſ. [chandelier, Fr.] An artiſan whoſe trade it is to make candles, or a perſon who ſells them.

The ſack that thou haſt drunken me, would have bought me lights as good cheap at the deareſt chandlers in Europe. Shakeſp.

But whether black or lighter dies are worn,
The chandler's baſket, on his ſhoulder born,
With tallow ſpots thy coat. Gay.

CHI'VALRY. n. ſ. [chevalerie, Fr. knighthood, from cheval, a horſe; as eques in Latin.] 1. Knighthood; a military dignity. 2. The qualifications of a knight; as, valour; dexterity in arms. 3. The general ſyſtem of knighthood. 4. An adventure; an exploit. Not now in uſe. 5. The body or order of knights. 6. [In law.] Servitium militare, of the French, chevalier; a tenure of land by knights ſervice. There is no land but is holden mediately or immediately of the crown, by ſome ſervice or other; and therefore are all our freeholds, that are to us and our heirs, called feuda, fees, as proceeding from the benefit of the king. As the king gave to the nobles large poſſeſſions for this or that rent and ſervice, ſo they parcelled out their lands, ſo received for rents and ſervices as they thought good; and thoſe ſervices are by Littleton divided into chivalry and ſocage The one is martial and military; the other, clowniſh and ruſtick. Chivalry, therefore, is a tenure of ſervice, whereby the tenant is bound to perform ſome noble or military office unto his lord, and is of two ſorts; either regal, that is, ſuch as may hold only of the king; or ſuch as may alſo hold of a common perſon as well as of the king. That which may hold only of the king is properly called ſergeantry, and is again divided into grand or petit, i. e. great or ſmall. Chivalry that may hold of a common perſon, as well as of the king, is called ſcutagium. Cowel. 7. It ought properly to be written chevalry. It is a word not much uſed, but in old poems or romances.

Cli'cket. n. ſ. [from click.] The knocker of a door. Skinner.

CLI'ENT. n. ſ. [cliens, Latin.] 1. One who applies to an advocate for counſel and defence. 2. It may be perhaps ſometimes uſed for a dependant in a more general ſenſe, as it was uſed among the Romans.

(1.) There is due from the judge to the advocate ſome commendation, where cauſes are well handled; for that upholds in the client the reputation of his counſel. Bacon's Eſſays.

Advocates muſt deal plainly with their clients, and tell the true ſtate of their caſe. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

(2.) I do think they are your friends and clients,
And fearful to diſturb you. Ben. Johnſon.

Cli'ented. particip. adj. [from client.] Supplied with clients.

This due occaſion of diſcouragement, the worſt conditioned and leaſt cliented petivoguers, do yet, under the ſweet bait of revenge, convert to a more plentiful proſecution of actions. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

Cliente'le. n. ſ. [clientela, Lat.] The condition or office of a client. A word ſcarcely uſed.

There's Varus holds good quarters with him;
And, under the pretext of clientele,
Will be admitted. Ben. Johnſon.

Cli'entship. n. ſ. [from client.] The condition of a client.

Patronage and clientſhip among the Romans always deſcended: the plebeian houſes had recourſe to the patrician line which had formerly protected them. Dryden.

Cliff. n. ſ. [clivus, Lat. clıꝼ, clıoꝼ, Saxon.] 1. A ſteep rock: a rock, according to Skinner, broken and craggy. [rupes.] 2. The name of a character in muſick. Properly Clef.

(1.) The Leucadians did uſe to precipitate a man from a high cliff into the ſea. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt.

Mountaineers, that from Severus came,
And from the craggy cliffs of Tetrica. Dryden.

Where-ever 'tis ſo found ſcattered upon the ſhores, there is it as conſtantly found lodged in the cliffs thereabouts. Woodw.

Clift. n. ſ. The ſame with Cliff. Now diſuſed.

—— Down he tumbled, like an aged tree,
High growing on the top of rocky clift. Spenſer.

CLIMA'CTER. n. ſ. [κλιμακτὴρ.] A certain ſpace of time, or progreſſion of years, which is ſuppoſed to end in a critical and dangerous time.

Elder times, ſettling their conceits upon climacters, differ from one another. Brown's Vulg. Err.

Climacte'rick. } Climacte'rical. } adj. [from climacter.] Containing a certain number of years, at the end of which ſome great change is ſuppoſed to befall the body.

Certain obſervable years are ſuppoſed to be attended with ſome conſiderable change in the body; as the ſeventh year; the twenty-firſt, made up of three times ſeven; the forty-ninth, made up of ſeven times ſeven; the ſixty-third, being nine times ſeven; and the eighty-firſt, which is nine times nine: which two laſt are called the grand climactericks.

The numbers ſeven and nine, multiplied into themſelves, do make up ſixty-three, commonly eſteemed the great climacterical of our lives. Brown's Vulg. Err.

Your lordſhip being now arrived at your great climacterique, yet give no proof of the leaſt decay of your excellent judgment and comprehenſion. Dryden.

My mother is ſomething better, tho', at her advanced age, every day is a climacterick. Pope.

CLI'MATE. n. ſ. [κλίμα.] 1. A ſpace upon the ſurface of the earth, meaſured from the equator to the polar circles; in each of which ſpaces the longeſt day is half an hour longer than in that nearer to the equator. From the polar circles to the poles climates are meaſured by the increaſe of a month. 2. In the common and popular ſenſe, a region, or tract of land, differing from another by the temperature of the air.

(2.) Betwixt th' extremes, two happier climates hold
The temper that partakes of hot and cold. Dryden.
On what new happy climate are we thrown? Dryden.

This talent of moving the paſſions cannot be of any great uſe in the northern climates. Swift.

To Cli'mate. v. n. To inhabit. A word only in Shakeſpeare.

———————— The bleſſed gods
Purge all infection from our air, whilſt you
Do climate here. Shakeſp.

Cli'mature. n. ſ. The ſame with Climate. Not in uſe.

Such harbingers preceding ſtill the fates,
Have heav'n and earth together demonſtrated
Unto our climatures and countrymen. Shakeſp.

Cli'max. n. ſ. [κλίμαξ.] Gradation; aſcent: a figure in rhetorick, by which the ſentence riſes gradually; as Cicero ſays to Catiline, Thou do'ſt nothing, moveſt nothing, thinkeſt nothing; but I hear it, I ſee it, and perfectly underſtand it.

Choice between one excellency and another is difficult; and yet the concluſion, by a due climax, is evermore the beſt. Dryden's Juv. Dedication.

Some radiant Richmond every age has grac'd,
Still riſing in a climax, 'till the laſt,
Surpaſſing all, is not to be ſurpaſt. Granville.

To CLIMB. v. n. pret. clomb or climbed; part. clomb or climbed. It is pronounced like clime. [climan, Saxon; klimmen, Dutch.] To aſcend up any place; to mount by means of ſome hold or footing. It implies labour and difficulty, and ſucceſſive efforts.

You tempt the fury of my three attendants,
Lean famine, quartering ſteel, and climbing fire. Shakeſp.
When ſhall I come to th' top of that ſame hill?——
——You do climb up it now. Look, how we labour. Shak.

Jonathan climbed up upon his hands, and upon his feet. 1 Sam.

———————— As a thief
Into the window climbs, or o'er the tiles,
So clomb the firſt grand thief into God's fold. Milton.
Thou, ſun! of this great world both eye and ſoul,
Acknowledge him thy greater; ſound his praiſe
In thy eternal courſe, both when thou climb'ſt,
And when high noon has gain'd, and when thou fall'ſt. Milton's Par. Loſt.

No rebel Titan's ſacrilegious crime,
By heaping hills on hills, can thither climb. Roſcommon.
Black vapours climb aloft, and cloud the day. Dryden.
———————— What controuling cauſe
Makes waters, in contempt of nature's laws,
Climb up, and gain th' aſpiring mountain's height? Blackm.

To Climb. v. a. To aſcend; to mount.

Is't not enough to break into my garden,
Climbing my walls, in ſpight of me the owner? Shakeſp.
———————— Thy arms purſue
Paths of renown, and climb aſcents of fame. Prior.
Forlorn he muſt, and perſecuted fly;
Climb the ſteep mountain, in the cavern lie. Prior.

Cli'mber. n. ſ. [from climb.] 1. One that mounts or ſcales any place or thing; a mounter; a riſer. 2. A plant that creeps upon other ſupports. 3. The name of a particular herb. To COME. v. n. pret. came, particip. come [coman, Sax. komen, Dut. kommen, Germ.] 1. To remove from a diſtant to a nearer place; to arrive: oppoſed to go. 2. To draw near; to advance towards. 3. To move in any manner towards another; implying the idea of being received by another, or of tending towards another. The word always reſpects the place to which the motion tends, not that place which it leaves; yet this meaning is ſometimes almoſt evaneſcent and imperceptible. 4. To proceed; to iſſue. 5. To advance from one ſtage or condition to another. 6. To be brought to ſome condition either for better or worſe, implying ſome degree of caſualty: with to. 7. To attain any condition or character. 8. To become. 9. To arrive at ſome act or habit, or diſpoſition. 10. To change from one ſtate into another deſired; as the butter comes when the parts begin to ſeparate in the churn. 11. To become preſent, and no longer future. 12. To become preſent; no longer abſent. 13. To happen; to fall out. 14. To befall as an event. 15. To follow as a conſequence. 16. To ceaſe very lately from ſome act or ſtate; to have juſt done or ſuffered any thing. 17. To COME about. To come to paſs; to fall out; to come into being. Probably from the French venir a bout. 18. To COME about. To change; to come round. 19. To COME again. To return. 20. To COME after. To follow. 21. To COME at. To reach; to get within the reach of; to obtain; to gain. 22. To COME by. To obtain; to gain; to acquire. This ſeems an irregular and improper uſe, but has very powerful authorities. 23. To COME in. To enter. 24. To COME in. To comply; to yield; to hold out no longer. 25. To COME in. To arrive at a port, or place of rendezvous. 26. To COME in. To become modiſh; to be brought into uſe. 27. To COME in. To be an ingredient; to make part of a compoſition. 28. To COME in. To accrue from an eſtate, trade, or otherwiſe, as gain. 29. To COME in. To be gained in abundance. 30. To COME in for. To be early enough to obtain: taken from hunting, where the dogs that are ſlow get nothing. 31. To COME in to. To join with; to bring help. 32. To COME in to. To comply with; to agree to. 33. To COME near. To approach; to reſemble in excellence: a metaphor from races. 34. To COME of. To proceed; as a deſcendant from anceſtors. 33. To COME of. To proceed; as effects from their cauſes. 36. To COME off. To deviate; to depart from a rule or direction. 37. To COME off. To eſcape; to get free. 38. To COME off. To end an affair; to take good or bad fortune. 39. To COME off from. To leave; to forbear. 40. To COME on. To advance; to make progreſs. 41. To COME on. To advance to combat. 42. To COME on. To thrive; to grow big; to grow. 43. To COME over. To repeat an act. 44. To COME over. To revolt. 45. To COME over. To riſe in diſtillation. 46. To COME out. To be made publick. 47. To COME out. To appear upon trial; to be diſcovered. 48. To COME out with. To give a vent to; to let fly. 49 To COME to. To conſent or yield. 50. To COME to. To amount to. 51. To COME to himſelf. To recover his ſenſes. 52. To COME to paſs. To be effected; to fall out. 53. To COME up. To grow out of the ground. 54. To COME up. To come into uſe, as a faſhion comes up. 55. To COME up to. To amount to. 56. To COME up to. To riſe; to advance. 57. To COME up with. To overtake. 58. To COME upon. To invade; to attack. 59. To COME. In futurity; not preſent; to happen hereafter. 60. COME is a word of which the uſe is various and extenſive, but the radical ſignification of tendency hitherward is uniformly preſerved. When we ſay he came from a place, the idea is that of returning, or arriving, or becoming nearer; when we ſay he went from a place, we conceive ſimply departure; or removal to a greater diſtance. The butter comes. It is paſſing from its former ſtate to that which is deſired, it is advancing towards us.

CO'MET. n. ſ. [cometa, Latin, a hairy ſtar.] A heavenly body in the planetary region appearing ſuddenly, and again diſappearing; and, during the time of its appearance, moving through its proper orbit, like a planet. The orbits of comets are ellipſes, having one of their foci in the center of the ſun; and being very long and eccentrick, they become inviſible, when in that part moſt remote from the ſun. Comets, popularly called blazing ſtars, are diſtinguiſhed from other ſtars by a long train or tail of light, always oppoſite to the ſun: hence ariſes a popular diviſion of comets into three kinds, bearded, tailed, and haired comets; though the diviſion rather relates to the different circumſtances of the ſame comet, than to the phænomena of the ſeveral. Thus when the comet is eaſtward of the ſun, and moves from it, the comet is ſaid to be bearded, barbatus, becauſe the light marches before it. When the light is weſtward of the ſun, the comet is ſaid to be tailed, becauſe the train follows it. When the comet and the ſun are diametrically oppoſite, the earth being between them, the train is hid behind the body of the comet, excepting a little that appears around it, in form of a border of hair, hence called crinitus.

According to Sir Iſaac Newton, the tail of a comet is a very thin vapour, emitted by the head or nucleus of the comet, ignited by the neighbourhood to the ſun, and this vapour is furniſhed by the atmoſphere of the comet. The vapours of comets being thus dilated, rarefied, and diffuſed, may probably, by means of their own gravity, be attracted down to the planets, and become intermingled with their atmoſpheres. For the conſervation of the water, and moiſture of the planets, comets ſeem abſolutely requiſite; from whoſe condenſed vapours and exhalations all that moiſture which is ſpent in vegetations and putrefactions, and turned into dry earth, may be reſupplied and recruited; for all vegetables increaſe wholly from fluids; and, turn by putrefactions into earth. Hence the quantity of dry earth muſt continually increaſe, and the moiſture of the globe decreaſe, and at laſt be quite evaporated, if it have not a continual ſupply. And I ſuſpect, adds Sir Iſaac, that the ſpirit which makes the fineſt, ſubtileſt, and beſt part of our air, and which is abſolutely requiſite for the life and being of all things, comes principally from the comets.

The ſame great author has computed that the ſun's heat, in the comet of 1680, was, to his heat with us at Midſummer, as twenty-eight thouſand to one; and that the heat of the body of the comet, was near two thouſand times as great as that of red-hot iron. He alſo calculates, that a globe of red-hot iron, of the dimenſions of our earth, would ſcarce be cool in fifty thouſand years. If then the comet be ſuppoſed to cool a hundred times as faſt as red-hot iron, yet, ſince its heat was a thouſand times greater, ſuppoſing it of the bigneſs of the earth, it would not be cool in a million of years. Trevoux. Chambers.

And wherefore gaze this goodly company,
As if they ſaw ſome wond'rous monument,
Some comet, or an unuſual prodigy.
Shakeſp. Taming of the Shrew.

Such his fell glances as the fatal light
